

Rivendell Utd.s Championship-Winning Season

Consider the following descriptions in The Lord of the Rings. In one of the windows he caught a glimpse of a sallow face with sly, slanting eyes. So that's where that southerner is hiding! he thought. He looks more than half like a goblin. a huge orc-chieftain. His broad flat face was swart. There were four goblin-soldiers of greater stature, swart, slant-eyed. a grim dark band, four score at least of large, swart, slant-eyed Orcs. Tolkien's visualisation of Orcs, goblins and generally suspicious types as unmistakably oriental is consistent throughout. There are numerous other examples where the description is varied only by the substitution of squint-eyed for slant-eyed. They could just as easily be called Chinks or gooks. I have read The Lord of the Rings at least 20 times and it is definitely the book I would take with me to a desert island, but as a swart, flat-faced, slant-eyed oriental, born and brought up in Britain, I have always been uneasy at Tolkien's stereotypical representations of good and evil. His heroes are mostly tall, upper-class, white men, while all the baddies are black or oriental or Arab/Asian and speak like lower-class factory workers. Partly as an anti-racist but non-politically correct antidote, and partly just as an opportunity for a grumpy-old-man style rant, I have written a parody using football (i.e. soccer) as an analogy. I hope it will amuse Tolkien addicts who are also football fanatics or enjoy playing spot-the-movie-reference. If it annoys supporters of the British National Party and Manchester United, that will be a bonus.
