

Europe: A Literary History, 1348-1418: Volume 2

This collaborative literary history of Europe, the first yet attempted, unfolds through ten sequences of places linked by trade, travel, topography, language, pilgrimage, alliance, disease, and artistic exchange. The period covered, 1348-1418, provides deep context for understanding current developments in Europe, particularly as initiated by the destruction and disasters of World War II. We begin with the greatest of all European catastrophes: the 1348 bubonic plague, which killed one person in three. Literary cultures helped speed recovery from this unprecedented ground zero experience, providing solace, distraction, and new ideals to live by. Questions of where Europe begins and ends, then as now, and disputes over whom truly belongs on European soil are explored, if not solved, through writing. A war that would last for a century convulsed much of western Europe. Divisions between Orthodox and Roman Catholic Christianities endured, and in 1378 the West divided again between popes of Avignon and Rome. Arabic literary cultures linked Fes and Granada to Jerusalem and Damascus; Persian and Turkish writings began to flourish south and west of Constantinople; Jewish intellectuals treasured Arabic texts as well as Hebrew writings; Armenian colophons proved unique. From 1414-18 western nations gathered to heal their papal schism while also exchanging literary, humanist, and musical ideas; visitors from the East hoped for commitment to wider European peace. Freed from nation state historiography, as bequeathed by the nineteenth century, these 82 chapters freshly assess the free movement of European literature in all its variety, local peculiarity, and regenerative power.

This collaborative two-volume literary history of Europe, the first yet attempted, unfolds Description: 2 volumes :

illustrations, maps 25 cm Spanning the period 1348-1418, the volumes demonstrate in unprecedentedThe second volume of this two-volume edition brings together leading scholars to offer the first full-scale literary history of Europe. Spanning the periodThis collaborative literary history of Europe, the first yet attempted, unfolds through ten sequences of places linked by trade, travel, topography, language,This collaborative literary history of Europe, the first yet attempted, unfolds through ten sequences of places linked by trade, travel, topography, language,The second volume of this two-volume edition brings together leading scholars to offer the first full-scale literary history of Europe. Spanning the periodThis collaborative two-volume literary history of Europe, the first yet attempted, unfolds through ten sequences of places linked by trade, travel, topography, language,Encuentra Europe: Volume 2: A Literary History, 1348-1418 de David Wallace (ISBN: 9780199580026) en Amazon. Envios gratis a partir de 19.David Wallace, Europe: A Literary History, 1348-1418, 2 vols. (Oxford Cambridge History of Medieval English Literature, which I edited in 1999, and the bookEurope. A Literary History, 1348-1418: Volume 1. Edited by David Wallace. The first literary history of Europe, showing how the continent recovered from itsEurope. A Literary History, 1348-1418: Volume 2. Edited by David Wallace. The first literary history of Europe, showing how the continent recovered from itsThis collaborative literary history of Europe, the first yet attempted, unfolds through ten sequences of places linked by trade, travel, topography, language, Europe. A Literary History, 1348-1418: Two-Volume Set. Edited by David Wallace. The first literary history of Europe, showing how the continentWallace, David ed., Europe: A Literary History, 1348-1418. Oxford UP, 2016. Two vols. xxv + 747 pp (Vol 1) xlii + 844 (Vol 2). ISBN: 978-0199580019 (Vol 1)This collaborative two-volume literary history of Europe, the first yet attempted, unfolds through ten sequences of places linked by trade, travel, topography, 1348-1418 by David Wallace. Europe : a literary history, 1348-1418. by David Wallace. Print book. English. 2016 a literary history, 1348-1418. Volume 2 . - 7 secRead Now <http://?book=0199580022>Read Europe: A Ruthenia (Lithuania-Rus), in Europe: A Literary History, 1348-1418. Edited by David Wallace. Oxford University Press, 2016, Volume 2, pp. 420-439.This collaborative literary history of Europe, the first yet attempted, unfolds through ten sequences of places linked by trade, travel, topography, language,This collaborative literary history of Europe, the first yet attempted, unfolds through ten sequences of places linked by trade, travel, topography, language,