

The Book Agent: His Book (Classic Reprint)

Publisher's Preface HE preface of a good book may be brief; few apologies are required. This work is not a book but a series of literary etchings on the landscapes of humanity. These etchings placed in composite arrangement on the mirror of life form a satire which attaches itself to the image of those who look therein. What a picturesque figure in literature is Don Quixote charging upon the windmills! But these etchings impale over against the minds horizon the figure of a windmill pursuing the Don Quixotes of our modern age. And what man is not a Don Quixote, since the smallest vicissitude of life may change his dearest reality to a mere phantasm, so that his charge is upon the void? In such spirit has our author writ. Further we need only say with voice attuned to the lyre of Catullus, to whom apologies Let those now laugh Who never laughed before; And those who always laughed, Now laugh the more.
